Introduction

General Robert E. Lee surrendered to General Grant at Appomattox Courthouse on April 9, 1865. President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated April 15, 1865. The last Confederate Army under the command of General Johnson surrendered to General Sherman at Charleston, South Carolina, on April 26, 1865. President Jefferson Davis had fled the Confederate capital at Richmond much earlier. The thirteenth amendment to the Constitution, abolishing slavery, was ratified December 18, 1865. With a few exceptions, President Andrew Jackson had granted amnesty to the citizens of the rebellious Southern States.

The courthouse at Bellefonte was not burned until the final days of the war. Many of the public records left in the courthouse during the occupation by the Union Army were not burned during that time. They were burned with the courthouse later.

The end of the conflict brought about the gradual withdrawal of most federal troops. As martial law was lifted, the elected officials began to exercise their responsibilities. The exercise of responsibility on the local level was hindered by the conflict on the national level between the president and the Congress. As Commander-In-Chief of the Army, both President Lincoln and President Johnson felt that the army of occupation should be directed by the President. The Congress, composed of mostly radical Republicans, felt that it should direct the army in carrying out the reconstruction policies. The conflict at Washington became so serious that Congress brought impeachment proceedings against President Johnson for "high crimes and treason." The President was found not guilty by one vote. Even though he remained in office, his influence in the decision making process was meager. Congress would direct the reconstruction of the rebellious states.

Since Congress passed a series of civil rights laws banning most southerners from voting, the provisional governor of Alabama, Lewis Persons, appointed carpetbaggers and scalawags to the various local offices throughout the state.

This situation was prevalent in Jackson County. The influence of the out-of-state carpetbaggers and the local scalawags is shown in some of the indentures recorded in Deed Book H.
